

Before 6th April, every time he would have got a chance to wish he would have asked "Please keep the flow of run continue from my bat so that i can make my team win more matches and bring joy to people of nation", but after 6th April he would have added one more wish "O'God .. if fans are like this .. then please take away all my fans .. i don't need any". Yes i am talking about Mr. Yuvraj Singh. I mean this human nature or we human beings are so selfish that it took us only 21 balls to forget what Yuvi has done for the Nation. How easily we summed up his 14 years tenure and still on into those 21 balls. Sad but true. Whenever you'll talk about his six sixes, his role in 2011 WC , you won't shut yourself by saying "he made us lose the 2014 t20 final". The joy and glory of those six deliveries will always overpower these 21 balls.

He will always be remembered for his innings in T20 finals than any other innings. He would have been helpless the way his fans reacted after these 21 balls.

From Nairobi to Mirpur, a long journey. A journey that showed many faces of Yuvraj Singh. Firstly, being anxious about the fact he is not able to score century earlier in his career and then transforming into match winner, taking matches to finish line. Stretching a bit extra, fielding at point, not letting ball go beyond him, batting at no5, finishing matches only to see his captain taking off his shirt and waving it at the lords balcony , to see his team win and smile on the face of people of his nation. From starting up slowly to smashing the ball in the end to catch upon his strike rate, yuvraj timings was never a question. Youngsters wish to have timings like him. From aggressive yuvraj singh which we used to see in the celebrations on scoring 100 to that cancer fighting calm, dedicated yuvraj singh.

From fursted not being able to make into test team as a regular player after Ganguly retirement, to that crying face after winning 2011 world cup. As if he took the responsibility of the beating Australia during big occasions. Losing to Australia in 2003 world cup final was still afresh in his mind which we was seen in the celebrations after defeating them in 2007 T20 world cup and then again 2011 World cup. Australia helped Yuvi to bring the best of him and that is where the journey begins, it is not easy to send the world champion team out of a tournament thrice in your career.

his only mistake is he comes from a nation where people don't understand the game. All they are concern about is to win. They dont believe in giving chance to a player instead they would prefer a new player. People here are impatient, they need quick results and that too in their favor. IPL is just the perfect example, its a game which runs in their favour, all the want to see smashing sixes, high scores game, tight games irriespective of the fact who won. They are there to enjoy those 3 hours.

Yuvraj will continue to play like he has been doing. He will keep on sweating on field, continue practicing hard just for his team and his nation. Great players do make a come back, for sure he will also. After all he has the "superman"(Mr. tendulkar) back on his side. And then you dont need anyone's suggestion or support when he is there with you. Come back yuvi, make a come back for you only. not for your fans..

YUVI u will always be loved...we can gift one final for u
